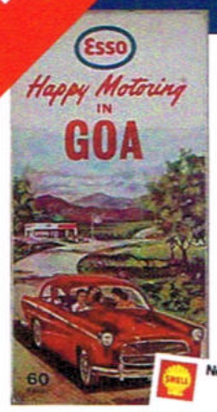
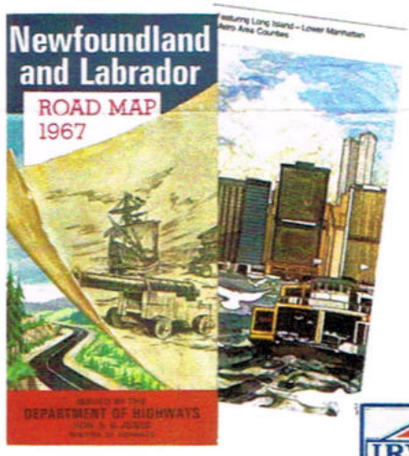
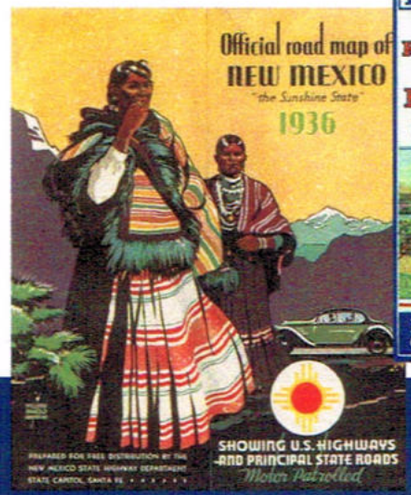
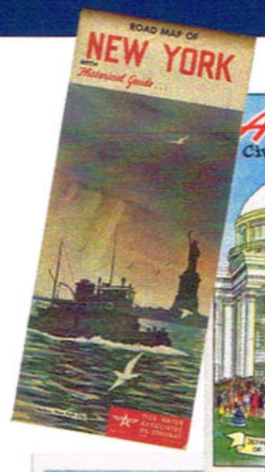
Road Map Collectors Association

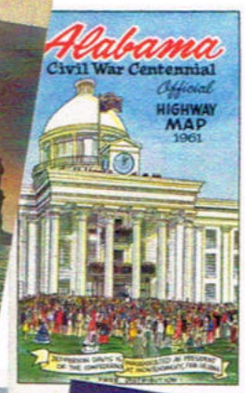
Preserving the heritage of road maps and their impact on transportation history

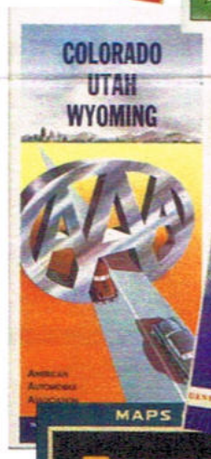


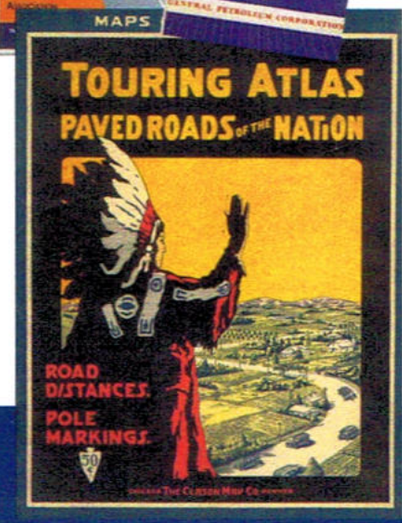












Road Map Collectors

The advent of affordable automobiles spawned a new trend in American culture: the road trip. Motorists anxious to tour the country needed an easy method of wayfinding. Road maps, given away by gasoline companies and state/provincial governments, became go-to guides. The maps' artistry and creativity made them popular with collectors, and they remain intriguing with today's map enthusiasts.
